

How can you invest for the long-term?

With the increasing focus on short-term results in our industry, it's easy to forget that pension schemes are fundamentally long-term investors. We think that an overly short-term outlook is potentially counterproductive, and for the best results pension schemes should look to the long-term, where their liabilities lie. Our principles and checklist will help you see through the noise and focus on the long term.

Principles of long-term investing

-  Have an awareness of your ultimate target and investment beliefs, including those relating to longer-term risks and rewards. Keep these in mind whenever considering new investments and monitoring existing investments and managers.
-  Consider the time horizon of different components of your assets and the balance between short and long term investments. For those you intend to hold for many years, think about whether you are adopting a long-term approach as much as possible (eg exploiting illiquidity premium or tolerating a volatile, but high growth, approach).
-  Have visibility of your short- to medium-term cashflow requirements and de-risking plans, so you can better assess how much you can afford to “lock up”.
-  Consider the importance of the entry point to a long term investment. Have a process in place to identify a better entry point if not immediate. Keep flexibility to move exit point so that this is not badly timed.
-  Select managers with strong expertise and credentials in taking account of long-term risks and opportunities, including those relating to environmental, social and governance (ESG) issues.
-  Ensure your managers exercise your ownership rights, such as shareholder voting rights, in a way that promotes the long-term success of investee companies.
-  Have a strong governance structure in place, which will make all of the above more easily manageable.

Checklist to help sense-check your long-term approach

1	We have considered and documented our investment beliefs, including those relating to long-term versus short-term returns, illiquidity premia, ESG and stewardship (active ownership practices such as voting and engagement)	<input type="checkbox"/>
2	We have discussed the time horizon of our investment and funding objectives, and selected assets and managers whose prospects are aligned with our time horizon	<input type="checkbox"/>
3	When monitoring investment performance, we place more weight on longer term returns (three to five years) than short term returns (less than one year)	<input type="checkbox"/>
5	When considering a new investment, we consider <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Time horizon of the investment relative to the costs to enter and exit</li> <li>• How much of our assets can be locked away in illiquid or long-term growth investments</li> <li>• Whether now is the right time to enter the investment and if not, what a better entry point would look like</li> <li>• If a long term investment, whether we believe the manager will be around for the long term</li> </ul>	<input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/>
4	We are familiar and satisfied with our equity managers' approach to ESG and stewardship. We receive sufficient updates on their activities in these areas	<input type="checkbox"/>
6	We regularly discuss ESG and stewardship matters at our trustee (or investment committee) meetings	<input type="checkbox"/>
7	Our Statement of Investment Principles includes considered statements about our approach to balancing short-term and long-term factors, exercising stewardship and including ESG factors in the investment process	<input type="checkbox"/>
8	We apply the above principles to DC investments as well as DB, where relevant	<input type="checkbox"/>
